These are difficult times. Budgets are dwindling, demands are increasing, and new ways of doing business are essential. A “new way” that many people are finding helpful is Motivational Interviewing, being used in social service agencies, educational systems, and correctional facilities around the country. Attend this session and learn

- How Motivational Interviewing works and why it is effective.
- How Motivational Interviewing can help students and customers take charge and assume more responsibility for their lives.
- How to apply Motivational Interviewing in your work setting.
- How Motivational Interviewing can improve your results.

The Motivational Interviewing session at the recent Building Skills conference in Seattle was standing room only. Because of this interest, the Center for Learning Connections is offering a full-day Motivational Interviewing workshop at Highline Community College on Thursday, July 9, from 8:30 a.m.-4:00 p.m. The facilitator will be Cal Crow.
